This tree fulfils the criteria of:

- Unique location or context
- Particularly old specimen
- Outstanding Size (girth height spread)
- Aesthetic value
- Outstanding habitat value

This large indigenous tree species is uniquely located in the front yard of a corner property and makes a major contribution to the local landscape. It is a particularly old example of the species, especially for one located on private lands and is of outstanding size for canopy spread.

Its prominent location and high visual presence ensure the tree is striking in the landscape, providing amenity to the community and making a substantial contribution to the neighbourhood character.

In conjunction with nearby groups of indigenous River Red Gums in Carnegie and Murrumbeena, this tree is an invaluable resource for native wildlife.
